From the Pastor: Monday is Labor Day. The following is adapted from the Roman Breviary:

In order that the dignity of human labor and the principles which underlie it might penetrate more deeply into souls, Pius XII has instituted the feast of St. Joseph the Workman, as an example and a protection for all associations of workers. For from this example, those who follow the worker's calling ought to learn how and in what spirit they should discharge their duties, so that, obeying the first law of God, they might likewise subdue the earth and attain to economic prosperity, and at the same time reap the rewards of eternal life. Nor will the prudent guardian of the Family of Nazareth fail to shield with his protection, and from heaven bless the homes of those who, like him, are artisans and workmen. Scripture tells us (Matt 13:54-58): When Jesus had come to his own country, he began to teach them in their synagogues, so that they were astonished, and said: "How did this man come by this wisdom and these miracles? Is this not the carpenter's son?"

In understanding this passage, we must remember that Joseph is said to have been a carpenter who earned his living by his skill and the work of his hands. He did not eat his bread in idleness and indulgence, like the Scribes and Pharisees. Mary also worked for her living with her husband, and with competent hands. When Jesus returned to His hometown, the people looked on Him with scorn saying: "This man of ignoble and poverty-stricken birth could not be Christ the Lord, whom God anointed. No credence is to be given to such an uncultivated and low-born man."
